Annual Report of gender equity

While good health and educational attainments are necessary for gender equality, the development experience in Kerala suggests that these accomplishments are insufficient to support gender equality – a Constitutional promise and a Constitutional right for all Indian men and women. Support for gender equality is often mistaken for “feminism” reducing demand among men and women, and there is little appreciation of the important function that gender equality plays in reducing poverty and in enhancing economic growth.

Annoor Dental college and Hospital provide equal opportunities and resources for female faculties in all arenas they are involved. There is also adequate evidence in development literature, which demonstrates that gender equality is about increased productivity, improved development outcomes for the next generation, and making institutions more representative. Yearly programmes are being conducted in our college to sensitize the gender equality.

Gender equality is not an alien concept– it is a part of the Indian Constitutional promise and represents a Constitutional right. Article 14 of the Indian Constitution confers equal rights and opportunities to both men and women in the political, economic and social spheres. Article 15 prohibits discrimination against any citizen inter alia on the grounds of sex. Article 15(3) provides affirmative discriminations in favor of women to correct discrimination. Article 16 provides for equality of opportunities in matter of public appointments for all citizens. Article 39 (a) related to state policies towards securing all citizens, men and women, equally, the right to means of livelihood. Article 39(d) requires public institutions to ensure equal pay for equal work. Article 42 directs the State to make provision for ensuring just and humane conditions of work and maternity relief. Finally, the Constitution imposes a fundamental duty on every citizen through Articles 51 (A) (e) to renounce the practices derogatory to the dignity of women.

Gender equality exist at multiple levels. They exist in markets in the form of barriers to entry and occupational segregation; in institutions in terms of failure to allow women's voices to be heard, through strongly-held beliefs and practices that undermine gender equality. Consequently, seeking change in the area of gender is complex and challenging because gender outcomes are a result of the ways in which social norms interact with markets, institutions, and individual aspirations and beliefs, to shape opportunities and outcomes for women and men throughout their lives.

Gender equality is not about women alone. It is about both men and women. It is not about equal numbers for men and women, although this may be important in some contexts. It is also not about treating men and women equally because given the biological differences, sometimes they need to be treated differently. It is about ensuring that both men and women have equal access to opportunities, that each can live fulfilling lives, and that each can contribute to the development of communities in which they live.
